

The Connecticut Success Story

Connecticut Returns

16- and 17-Year-Olds to Juvenile court Jurisdiction

In June 2007, the Connecticut legislature approved a bill raising the age of juvenile court jurisdiction from 16 to 18. The legislation is being implemented in phases, with a focus on bringing 16-year-olds back into the juvenile system first. As of January 2010, 16-year-olds were officially part of the juvenile justice system. This success was the result of the combined efforts of legislators, specifically Representative Toni Walker and Senator Toni Harp, state agencies, law enforcement officials, judicial officers, advocacy and grassroots organizations, parents, and family members. These various stakeholders were brought together in large part by the “Raise the Age CT” campaign coordinated by the Connecticut Juvenile Justice Alliance (CTJJA) and the Juvenile Jurisdiction Planning and Implementation Coordinating Council (JJPICC). Representative Walker expressed the sentiment behind the campaign, saying, “There are still penalties in place for kids who commit crimes. But we will hold them accountable in a setting that’s designed to improve their behavior rather than exacerbate it. Sending kids to adult prisons is a great way to create adult criminals. Connecticut is now out of that business.”

Connecticut has set a powerful example for other states that it is possible to help youth without compromising public safety. The results of the first year of implementation are promising. According to Abby Anderson, Executive Director of CTJJA, “the implementation has proceeded smoothly.” A recent report by CTJJA, Safe and Sound, has found that keeping the 16-year-olds out of the adult system has not overloaded the juvenile justice system – nor has it led to more juvenile crime. Seventeen-year-olds are expected to be added to the juvenile system on July 1, 2012.<sup>1</sup>
